

Vision and Core Themes

Planning an Inclusive City

"Growing inclusively means that individuals and families are not confined to particular economic and geographic boundaries but are able to make important choices – choices about where they live, how and where they earn a living, how they get around the city, and where their children go to school. Growing inclusively also means that every resident can make these choices – regardless of whether they have lived here for generations or moved here last week, and regardless of their race, income, or age."

The Comprehensive Plan identifies 5 core themes to guide planning in the District of Columbia. The core themes are implemented by 36 Guiding Principles to create a more inclusive city.

1 Managing Growth and Change

Square 54 Development, Foggy Bottom

2 Creating Successful Neighborhoods

H Street Northeast Streetscape Improvements

3 Increasing Access to Education & Employment

George Washington University Campus Plan

4 Connecting the Whole City

Circulator Bus

5 Building Green & Healthy Communities

K Street Greenway (LID Installation)
